COMMANDER'S DISPATCH

I am honored you have chosen me to fill out the remainder of the term for Commander of the Reagan Camp. I first got involved with the SCV in 1989 when I found out about the Hillsboro Camp when I went to visit the Confederate Research Center at Hill College. I came to love Hillsboro Camp members like Buddy Patterson and Bob Moore. I eventually felt that we needed a camp in the Corsicana area where I was then living. With the help of Central Texas Brigade Commander John C. Perry, we were able to reactivate the J. L. Halbert Camp #359 in Corsicana. My daughters grew up frequenting SCV events, battlefields, and historical sites. My wife was patient with my enthusiasm for all things SCV and attended many state and a few national reunions. I was honored to be a Camp Commander, a Brigade Commander, Division Officer, and Army Officer. I was first interested in the SCV because of my love for all things Confederate. I wanted to know more about the War and it was great socializing with men who honored the Confederate soldier as I did and had a thirst for fleshing out the history of that turbulent time. I have never had a particular agenda regarding the War and do not now. I would like to see all who honor our Confederate ancestors and would just like to learn more about our Southern history to have a place to come and feel welcome in the Reagan camp. Some of us have deep roots in Anderson County and others of us may be new immigrants to Texas. I have many times harassed friends who have Yankee ancestors, but have never meant it any other way than good natured kidding. Some of our guests may have both Confederate and Union ancestors. I will try and not brag that mine are all Confederate, but I really want everyone to feel welcome and will attempt to lead the camp in that direction. I think the thing that would most honor the memory of my Confederate ancestors is to act honorably, in all things be cordial and polite, and try and live the part of a Christian gentleman. To quote one of my heroes, Nathan Bedford Forrest, in his farewell address to his men: "You have been good soldiers, you can be good citizens. Obey the laws, preserve your honor, and the Government to which you have surrendered can afford to be, and will be, magnanimous."

Forrest certainly did not want to quit, and the Government was not always magnanimous, but I believe he chose an honorable ending to an honorable life. Remembering the sacrifice of our Confederate ancestors and their subsequent honorable lives that rebuilt the wonderful South we now inhabit, we, in the Sons of Confederate Veterans, should be honored to keep their memory and example alive.

This flag flies in honor and memory of over 1,000 Confederate veterans from Anderson County who marched off to war, one third of whom never returned, and the over 500 Confederate veterans from all across the South who are buried in this county. They fought for liberty and independence from a tyrannical and oppressive government. Provided by the John H. Reagan Camp # 2156, Sons of Confederate Veterans. www.reaganscvcamp.org

JOHN H. REAGAN CAMP CONFEDERATE ARTIFACT BY ANDREW HARRIS

Images of Robert E. Lee War-Time Photographs of the General in Carte de Visite

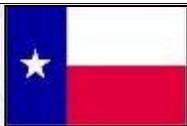

It is said that a picture is “worth a thousand words”. However, in the case of a picture of Robert E. Lee, a thousand words - perhaps even volumes - would fall far short of an adequate description. So in this instance we will just let the pictures speak for themselves.

Featured here are two examples of war-time photographs of General Lee. These period photographs are of the “carte de visite” format (abbreviated “CDV”). These small photographs, usually measuring about 2.5 by 4 inches in size, were made of a thin paper albumen print mounted on a thicker card stock. Patented in the 1850’s, albumen prints were the first commercially viable method of reproducing photographic images from negatives. CDVs began to gain widespread use by 1860 and they became very popular in America during the War Between the States. The immense popularity of these card photographs led to the publication and collection of photographs of prominent persons and military leaders, such as General Lee.

The first CDV pictured here, is a bust view of Lee that has become known as his “In the Field” (with unbuttoned jacket) pose. The original photograph is believed to be one of a series of three, taken by the Richmond-based photographer Minnis & Cowell. The other two pictures in the series include an additional seated view with his jacket buttoned, as well as a full-length standing view known as the “Booted and Spurred” photograph. This series of pictures were the first formally posed photographs of Lee as a general. Evidence suggests that they were taken in the field, at Lee’s headquarters, sometime after the Fredericksburg Campaign ended in December 1862 but prior to the May 1863 Battle of Chancellorsville. In case there were any doubt as to who the subject might be, this particular CDV bears a nice handwritten inscription, in period ink, at the bottom of the card.

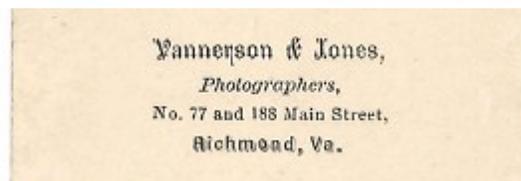

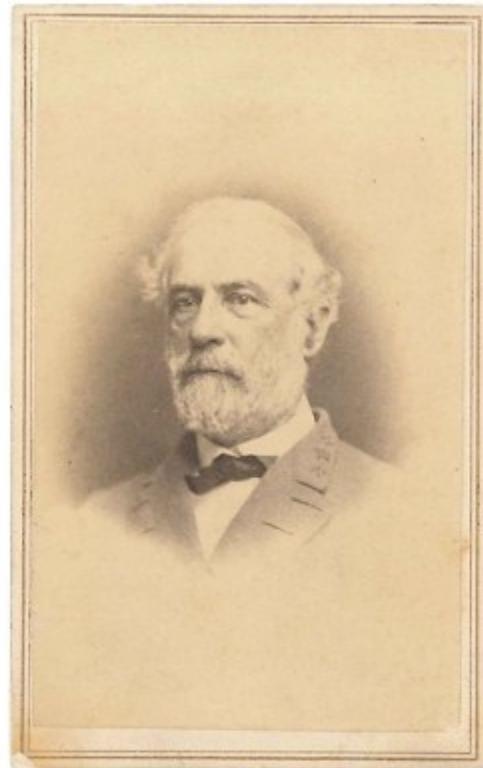

JOHN H. REAGAN CAMP CONFEDERATE ARTIFACT BY ANDREW HARRIS

Many eyewitness descriptions of General Lee's uniforms worn during the war corroborate that of the Chaplain of the Army of Northern Virginia: "[He] was always simply attired and carefully avoided the gold lace and feathers in which other delighted. During the war he usually wore a suit of gray, without ornament and no insignia of rank save the three stars on his collar which every Confederate colonel was entitled to wear. But he always kept a handsome though equally simple uniform which he wore upon occasions of ceremony."

The second CDV highlighted here is also a bust view of General Lee. The original photograph was taken by the photographer Julian Vannerson, at a Richmond studio, in 1864. Vannerson was a native of Virginia and historical documents indicate that he may have been the only photographer operating in Richmond for most of 1864. In May of 1865, Vannerson partnered with C.E. Jones and for a short time they operated their studio out of two different Richmond locations. The back of this CDV bears the "Vannerson & Jones" imprint and lists the two address for their studio, which suggests that this CDV was printed between November 1865 and May 1866. Surviving correspondence between the studio and Lee indicate that the General, himself, was accumulating images from Vannerson during this time period for his personal use and dispersal.

The last war-time photograph of Lee was taken on the streets of Petersburg, Virginia, by an unknown photographer in the fall of 1864. It is an uncommon view of the General mounted on Traveller in all his martial splendor. As a contemporary of Lee's once wrote, "I have seen all the great men of our times...and I have no hesitation in saying that Robert E. Lee was incomparably the greatest looking of them all." No doubt the noble features of this honorable man are the personification of "duty faithfully performed".

JOHN H. REAGAN CAMP FEBRUARY MEETING PICTURES

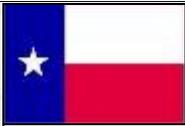

During the February meeting, the Reagan Camp compatriots elected David Franklin as the new Camp Commander to fill the vacancy left after Rudy Ray stepped down last month. David has been an SCV member for 25 years, and during that time he has served as Camp Commander, Brigade Commander, Division Officer, and Army Officer. We welcome him as the new Commander of the John H. Reagan Camp #2156.

The February 2015 meeting went very well. We had 31 in attendance for the meal and the meeting to follow. The meal consisted of pizza, fried chicken & gravy, peas, cornbread, squash, and all kinds of desserts.

We appreciate all that brought food, There was enough food to have fed 50. So if you weren't there, we hope you will make plans to join us next month.

JOHN H. REAGAN CAMP FEBRUARY HISTORICAL PROGRAM BY NORRIS WHITE

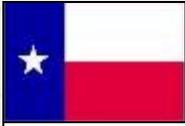

The John H. Reagan Camp was honored to have Norris White Jr. present the February Historical Program. He gave an excellent presentation that covered some of the orders enacted in the Trans-Mississippi Department in 1864 by Commanding General E. Kirby Smith.

Mr. White stated the following: "Because of lack of attention paid to historical coverage of military affairs in the Confederacy's Trans-Mississippi Department, the significance of operations that took place in Arkansas, Louisiana, and Texas in the over-all strategic picture is often over-looked or ignored." His discussion examined strategic policy and actions rendered by (General Smith) in order to prevent Union occupation of the Lone Star State. Mr. White informed us that most Texans have great pride in being Texans and put that ahead of being Confederate, American, or anything else. He told of how Texans felt an obligation to Texas above that of the Confederacy, and many that were reported as deserters were not deserters at all. They simply left their battle in other states to defend their home state of Texas. In 1864, an invasion of Texas was certain. 5000 men successfully defended Texas, and many of these had left the battle in other places to defend their homeland. He pointed out that deserters stopped fighting. These men didn't desert, since they kept fighting. They simply fought where their loyalty was.

In the fateful year of 1864 with the fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, General E. Kirby Smith had lost contact with the main army. General Smith realized that he did not have the man power to prevent the Yankees from invading Texas, so he started enlisting black men as soldiers to fight for Texas. These black men were confederate soldiers who helped defeat the Yankees who tried to invade Texas. Although many would like to say that blacks did not fight for the south, they did indeed fight. They fought, and they should be honored just as other soldiers who fought. Mr. White went into detail as he made the point of black confederates enlisting to keep the Yankees out of Texas. As he said, one of the strongest powers in the universe is the power and pride of being a Texan! It was a driving force whether you were black or white or whatever. The John H. Reagan Camp appreciates and honors all soldiers who fought for the South, no matter their color.

The John H. Reagan Camp appreciates Mr. White for bringing us an excellent program. His book "Black Texans in a Trans-Mississippi Confederate Army" will be in print next year. We encourage everyone to purchase a copy.

JOHN H. REAGAN CAMP “A TASTE OF WAR”

Civil War soldiers were incredibly prolific writers, even though some had a mighty crude command of grammar. Despite this, most penned letters home daily due to the fact that a vast majority of their time was spent in camp rather than in battle. Much is written about the momentous battles fought over the four-year span of the war; however, nearly 90 percent of a combat soldier's time was spent in camp or on the march.

What the soldiers wrote about more often than anything else was their daily bread. The old military truism that states “An army marches on its belly” is certainly an apt metaphor for the Civil War soldier.

Nearly every soldier went hungry at some time during the war. And in the Confederacy, where most of the war was fought, Southern men were never fed to satisfy any of their dietary needs. In fact, of the 700,000 soldiers that died in the war, nearly 100,000 died of “die-rear”— the usual spelling of the word diarrhea in soldiers' letters and memoirs.

Clearly, the Northern armies had better supply organizations and quantity of foodstuffs, but there is no tangible proof that the South ever lost a battle due to inadequate food or supplies. Yet food did play a vital role in how the armies functioned and performed. While the Campaign of Gettysburg was climaxing here in the bountiful farmlands of Pennsylvania in the middle of the summer of 1863, thousands of besieged Confederates holed up in the sultry confines of Vicksburg, Mississippi, were slowly starving to death as federal forces surrounded the fortress city for more than a month. By the final days of the siege, a Confederate soldier was subsisting on a cup of peas and rice and one cup of water per day.

Both armies were mostly made up of volunteer soldiers who had never worried about cooking meals or tending to their dietary needs while at home in the nineteenth-century America. When the armies formed, neither were able to provide enough cooks or “mess” facilities to handle the tens of thousands of mouths that needed at least three meals per day.

Off on their own, soldiers came up with remarkably innovative ways to satisfy their hunger. Perhaps the most famous memoirist for the Confederacy was Private Sam Watkins, who survived four years of war and penned a fascinating chronicle of life in camp and on the numerous battlefields in Tennessee.

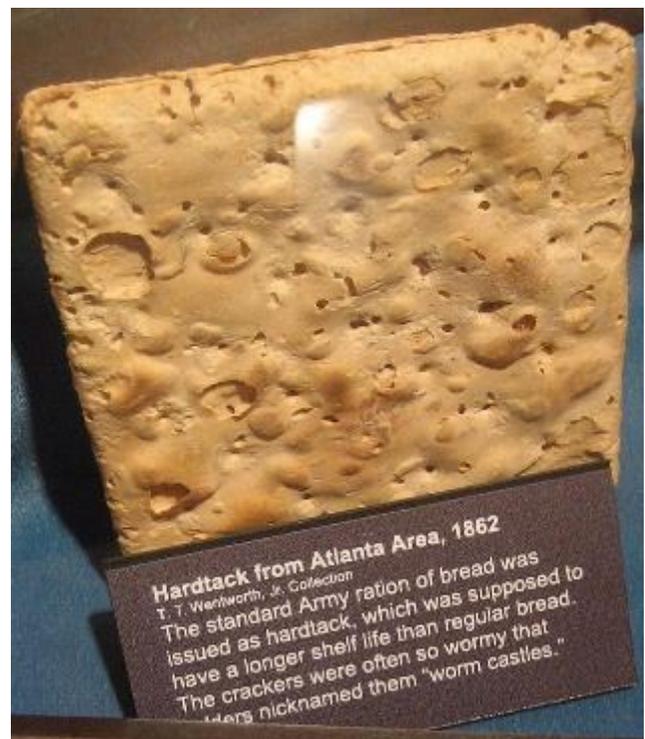

“One day we heard folks of Vicksburg were living on rats, so we knocked down an old outhouse and out jumped an old and gray rat,” Watkins wrote.

“I suppose he had been chased before because he slipped back down his hole, but we grabbed him by the tail as he went into his hole... We skinned him, washed him, salted him and buttered and peppered him, then we fried him. He actually looked nice.”

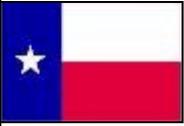

But as Watkins was about to take a bite, he remembered the rat's former home and thought twice about eating him. “I never thought of eating a rat again,” Watkins wrote.

The most basic food item in both armies was hardtack—a 3-inch, square, bricklike cracker of bread made with flour, yeast, and very little water. The average soldier ate a dozen “tooth dollars” or “worm castles” a day. Most of the hardtack was made in makeshift ovens in a matter of minutes. After ward, it was stored in boxes that usually were exposed to hot sun and rain, often making them breeding grounds for worms and flies. On the march, an army might consume more than two million hardtack crackers per day.

THE ARTICLE BELOW IS AN EXCERPT FROM THE BOOK
“LEE THE LAST YEARS”
BY CHARLES BRACELEN FLOOD

Nine days after Virginia was stripped of its statehood, some Washington College students heard that white Northern speakers were going to make speeches to the blacks of Lexington that night. Five students, three from Texas, one from Georgia, and one from Alabama angrily headed into the evening, not certain of what they were going to do. The boy from Alabama took along a pistol.

Coming to the schoolhouse in which the Freedman’s Bureau conducted classes for blacks, the boy from Alabama went up to a window to see if anyone was inside. Suddenly, a black man stepped out of the shadows to intercept him. The startled boy drew his pistol and started hitting the black man with it. The other students pulled them apart and rushed the boy from Alabama into the night, but in a few minutes all were apprehended, except for the young man with the gun, who vanished.

A few more minutes, and the word was all over campus that fellow students had been in a fight with a black man at a meeting — Freedman’s Bureau, white Northern agitators, damn Yankees — and had been thrown in jail. There were close to four hundred students now in the college, and most charged out of their rooms, determined to rescue their college mates. It looked as if there was about to be an angry march to the jail, and a scene similar to that when the horse thief had been imprisoned, except that this time Lee was at home, with no idea that anything was happening. The students were going to storm the jail and free their comrades.

Suddenly a student appeared as Lee had, but this was no ordinary student. He was Givens B. Strickler, the former captain of the Liberty Hall Volunteers who had led an attack that carried into the Union lines at Gettysburg, where he had been captured. “Steady men!” he was saying as he had heard it said, and had said it to others, on a score of battlefields. “Steady men! Steady Men!” As each group stopped shouting to look at him, he added, “Remember General Lee! No violence! Remember General Lee. Let the law take its course. You must do what General Lee would wish.”

The excited crowd dispersed. The four jailed students were tried by the mayor and fined for disturbing the peace. When they were released, they were asked to come to Lee’s office. As they entered, they saw that the student from Alabama who had escaped detection was also there, voluntarily coming forward. This youth, who had carried the pistol and struck the black man, explained what had happened and said that the fault was entirely his. Lee nodded and instantly expelled him. The others he formally reprimanded and put on probation. By the time an official of the Freedman’s Bureau wrote Lee a letter of complaint and inquiry, the offender was back in Alabama, and Lee’s explanation of the actions he had taken satisfied the Freedman’s Bureau. Lee understood better than anyone that this was now a situation in which one wrongful, passionate pull of a trigger could close Washington College, perhaps permanently.

In the late spring of 1867, Lee found person after person railing against the Reconstruction Acts, against the Republican Party, against Washington, against the damn Yankees. To a Confederate widow who was expressing hatred for the North, he said: “Madam, do not train up your children in hostility to the government of the United States. Remember, we are all one country now. Dismiss from your mind all sectional feeling, and bring them up to be Americans.”

TEXAS DIVISION CHAPLAIN'S ARTICLE A MESSAGE FROM REV. DON MAJORS "NO GREATER LOVE"

During WWII, an enemy submarine approached a fleet of ships in the North Atlantic. The captain of the vessel spotted the white mark of a torpedo coming directly at his ship. His transport was loaded with literally hundreds and hundreds of young soldiers on the way to the European front. He realized that they would not have time to maneuver to avoid the torpedo. He grabbed the loudspeaker and cried out, "Boys, this is it!"

Nearby, though, a little escorting destroyer also observed the torpedo. The captain ordered, "Full speed ahead." The ship steamed into the path of the torpedo. The destroyer was blown up; it sank very quickly. Every man on it was lost. The captain of the troop transport ship sadly commented, "The skipper of that destroyer was my best friend." Now one verse in the Bible has an even deeper meaning for that captain. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." (John 15:13) That "Man" that laid down His life for us was our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The poet said.....

"When nothing whereon to lean remains,

When strongholds crumble to dust;

When nothing is sure,

Our God still reigns."

When the Southland laid in death, burned fields, and wasteland, when seemingly nothing remains to lean on, and when Southern strongholds appeared to be crumbled in the dust, and the future seemed unsure, our Southern ancestors remained strong in their Christian Faith. They knew God still reigned. He would restore and heal our land.

As we celebrate Valentine's Day with beautiful flowers and candy with those we love, never forget the greatest "Valentine" of all. His love still reigns, and may we never forget to love, honor, and remember our Southern ancestors to whom we owe so much.

God Bless Ya'll and God Bless Dixie!

The citizen-soldiers who fought for the Confederacy personified the best qualities of America. The preservation of liberty and freedom was the motivating factor in the South's decision to fight the Second American Revolution. The tenacity with which Confederate soldiers fought underscored their belief in the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. These attributes are the underpinning of our democratic society and represent the foundation on which this nation was built.

Today, the Sons of Confederate Veterans is preserving the history and legacy of these heroes, so future generations can understand the motives that animated the Southern Cause.

The SCV is the direct heir of the United Confederate Veterans, and the oldest hereditary organization for male descendants of Confederate soldiers. Organized at Richmond, Virginia in 1896, the SCV continues to serve as a historical, patriotic, and non-political organization dedicated to ensuring that a true history of the 1861-1865 period is preserved.

Membership in the Sons of Confederate Veterans is open to all male descendants of any veteran who served honorably in the Confederate armed forces. Membership can be obtained through either lineal or collateral family lines and kinship to a veteran must be documented genealogically. The minimum age for full membership is 12, but there is no minimum for Cadet membership.

Friends of the SCV memberships are available as well to those who are committed to upholding our charge, but do not have the Confederate ancestry.

THE CHARGE TO THE SONS OF CONFEDERATE VETERANS

"To you, Sons of Confederate Veterans, we will commit the vindication of the cause for which we fought. To your strength will be given the defense of the Confederate soldier's good name, the guardianship of his history, the emulation of his virtues, the perpetuation of those principles which he loved and which you love also, and those ideals which made him glorious and which you also cherish."
